Analysis of a Case Study or Situation

1. Form groups of five or six.
2. Take five quiet minutes to draw from your university experience some "conflict in ethics" that could be presented to the group as a case study. (Make a few notes to get it organized.) This conflict in ethics could be broadened to be a significant difference in values from a multi-faith or multi-cultural perspective.
3. Each of the participants explains briefly their "case" to the others.
4. As a group chose one case to work on, or more than one if they are complimentary.
5. Through questions explore the character of differences implied in the case and try to identify the foundation principles at stake.
6. Try to expose together how this conflict can be met in the university community.
7. If there is time, take on another case and repeat steps 4, 5, and 6.
